Letters to the Editor

Dear Steve,
I meant to send this earlier, immediately after I received my forwarded copy of the Cottey Viewpoint. Congratulations on your fine first edition of your magazine. I know you must be very proud — and you should be.
All my best wishes,
Helen Washburn

I LOVE the new Viewpoint! Very well done...attractive, and “newsy”!
Again...congratulations on a fine new publication!

Dear Steve,
Since you requested feedback on our first magazine format, I write to let you know my feelings on the subject.
The magazine looks great, the clarity of the photos are far superior to what we have had in the past and it all looks very professional and in keeping with the moving forward image of Cottey. However, I do feel there is a serious drawback with the information as presented relevant to the photos that were chosen to be included. Very few photos tell you “who” is featured in the picture or at least a class year. As an alumna I would appreciate at least knowing which were the class years included on page 2...the Women’s Leadership page 13 gave brief bios on 9 women — however there are 13 women in the photo...and no idea whose face went with which bio.

None of the names were included, but they were listed in the Class of ’63 and also the Class of ’72. I would like to think that after all these years, we are totally recognizable and haven’t changed one iota, but I am very realistic and know that the sands of time have certainly changed our appearances and thus anyone reading this magazine needs all the help they can get when looking at the photos submitted.

Thank you for taking the time to read this,
Elizabeth Doyle Carty — Class of 1964

Editor’s note: We hear you, Elizabeth. Captions will accompany photos when the subject isn’t obvious.

Just had to write and let you know how much I enjoyed the new VIEWPOINT! ! It was alive.....I even read it all the way through....which hasn’t always happened in the past years ! I was graduated from Cottey in 1951. After 62 years interest was on the downside.....now I’m all enthused again. Thank you for making it happen! Good job! Keep up the good work! Sincere as can be......Emma J. (Sands) Willis

Dear Steve:
What an impressive improvement in the format of the Viewpoint. Thanks to all who worked on it. A great improvement for the image of Cottey.

Thank you,
Sincerely,
Ann Davidson

Hello Steve!
I do LOVE the new magazine format of Viewpoint!I love its look and its feel. It is easy to read; great articles! Its pictures are such lovely vivid color. I can’t wait to share this new Viewpoint with my P.E.O. chapter in September!

The move from newspaper-style was definitely a good one, in my opinion!
Congratulations!
Barbara Dittmar, Chapter H, Delaware

Editor: We had more letters than space would allow us to print, but appreciate every one of you who took the time to write or email us your thoughts.

A Message from the EDITOR

Simply Wowed.

We did our best to ‘wow’ you with our first magazine issue of the Viewpoint. We didn’t expect being “wowed” by your responses. I received more messages regarding this single issue of the Viewpoint than all the other issues I have put together in 21 years. Our readers responded, not just positively, but overwhelmingly so. We heard from current and former members of the Cottey College Board of Trustees, from administrators and officials at the P.E.O. Executive Office in Des Moines, from alumnae, and from friends of the College. Above are some of emails we received this summer.

We received a couple of messages suggesting some things we could have done differently, and we take them to heart as much as those praising our work. In particular, we’ll make sure that photos specific to an article have clearly identified captions. I believe we did a good job with the first magazine, but like everything else in life, there is always room for improvement, and we will strive to produce the best magazine we possibly can.

Having said that, we hope you enjoy this issue focusing on the fine arts at Cottey. The College offers a robust academic environment for fostering creativity, and has produced some incredibly talented women. I continue to be impressed and inspired by the amazing women who bring their gifts and abilities to this campus.

As always, you are invited to share your thoughts with me at sreed@cottey.edu.

Sincerely,
Steve Reed, editor

The Vitality of the Arts

For nearly five years we have worked through the Defining Moment Campaign to raise the nine million dollars needed to renovate Neale Hall and build a new fine arts instructional building as an addition to Neale. This work has caused me to reflect more than usual on the importance of the fine arts on the impact and the vitality of Cottey College.

We have graduated many young women who have succeeded remarkably in fine arts careers. We have been able to follow the success of many of them, but we do not know how many began the study of art, music, dance, or another of the fine arts, and pursued that avocation for a lifetime of personal satisfaction. Nor do we know how many may have been inspired by watching a performance or viewing an exhibit.

Cottey is located in a geographic area where our campus may be the single best place to find lessons, classes, or performances. During the past 25 years, there have been 372 performances, with a total audience of 75,850, for an average audience size of 204 people. This includes the sold-out performances like the Kansas City Symphony, State Ballet of Missouri, The National Shakespeare Company, Alvin Alley Repertory Company, Riders in the Sky, the Beatles tribute band, and several variations on Chinese or Kenyan drummers and acrobats. It also includes such smaller performances as spoken word artists, solo musicians, speakers, chamber groups, comedians, and novelty/variety performers. The fine arts create a vibrant campus culture.

Nevertheless, the fine arts and humanities are under attack and, in some places, losing financial support. Those who think the arts are frivolous luxuries need to consider what employers want and need in their workforce. They want more than a single skill set. They want employees who can solve problems, think critically, and communicate clearly. Consider problem solving while choreographing a dance or communicating a character clearly through song. Without a doubt, the fine arts teach the skills employers want. Cottey must have a well-equipped fine arts instructional building and additional academic programs in the fine arts to continue our strong tradition in fine arts education.

Sincerely,

Judy R. Rogers

Become a Class Agent!
Connect Your Classmates

By Mary Frances Peterson Main ’87, CCAA Head Class Agent

As a former art student at Cottey, I have fond memories of Neale Hall. I particularly enjoyed my job in Neale, where I was hired to keep an eye on the building. The part I loved most about this job was getting to know other students—where they were from, their likes and dislikes, etc. Now, over 25 years later, I find myself in a similar place. My love for the arts and my sense of responsibility for the future of Neale Hall, through supporting the Alumnae Challenge, is once again at the forefront. I also am able to once again get to know another group of past Cottey students: Class Agents. As the Head Class Agent on the CCAA Executive Board, I have the opportunity to engage Cottey alumnae through the Class Agent program.

What is a Class Agent? A Class Agent is the representative from each class responsible for keeping her classmates connected to the College and each other through regular communication and networking. This person also helps organize the class giving effort and hosts the class when they return for Founder’s Day.

Creating a connection between your classmates and Cottey will require regular communication. You can do this through Class Agent letters, social media, round-robin emails, online newsletters, or any other great way to communicate that you can dream up. And you don’t have to do it alone; Class Agents can create a small committee of classmates to help conquer all the duties of a Class Agent.

Why should you become a Class Agent? It’s a fun opportunity to connect your classmates with each other and the College. You can network, make new connections, and learn new skills. It also provides an inside look into the work of the CCAA Executive Board and can help you decide if you’d like to serve in a larger capacity to help Cottey College.

Who is your Class Agent? Find out at http://community.cottey.edu/ClassAgent.

Who do you talk to if you’re interested in becoming a Class Agent? Email me at mary-frances@widgetinc.com.

How can you connect with your class? Join the alumnae Facebook page (http://www.facebook.com/CotteyAlumnae) where you will find a list of class Facebook pages.

According to the Viewpoint readership survey, the number one topic of interest to readers is Institutional History and Traditions. As we pondered how to best present this subject, we developed the “Remember Who, What, When?” concept that will appear in every issue. But to make this feature a success, we need to hear from you, the reader. Because who knows Cottey history better than those who have lived it?

Here is how it works. In each issue a picture and writing prompt will appear. The responses gathered will then appear in the next issue of the Viewpoint along with a new picture and a new prompt.

Our second picture prompt comes from the year 1963. On October 13, the Blanche Skiff Ross Memorial Library was dedicated to Cottey College in honor of Mrs. Frank P. Ross of Oak Park, Illinois, niece of Alice Virginia Coffin, one of the seven Founders of the P.E.O. Sisterhood. Pictured above are Cottey College President Dr. Blanche H. Dow with Mrs. Frank P. Ross in the newly completed Library. The 50th year celebration of the Library kicked off during P.E.O. Visit Day on October 26, 2013.

If you have any photos of the Library ground-breaking ceremony, the laying of the cornerstone, or of students moving boxes of books from Main Hall to the Library, we would love for you to share your images and stories. These images can be scanned and shared electronically or donated to the College Archives. Please email Tracy Cordova at peorelations@cottey.edu or mail your materials to Office of P.E.O. Relations, Cottey College, 1000 W. Austin, Nevada, MO 64772. Please include the following information: your name, a contact phone number, and a brief explanation of your artifacts.

Remember Who, What, or When?

If you have information about any of the people in the picture, perhaps they are a distant relative, we want to hear your story. If you possess records about a relative who attended Cottey and/or taught at Cottey between the years 1884–1934, we want to hear your story. Please email Tracy Cordova at peorelations@cottey.edu with the following information: your name, your relation to Cottey, and brief explanation about your relative’s tie to Cottey during 1884–1934.

NOW is the Time!

Member of the Alumnae Challenge Commitee and the Cottey College Alumnae Association

Cottey College alumnae, listen up! It is time to finish what we started—help fund the renovation of the Neale Hall portion of the new Fine Arts Instructional Building.

I am constantly amazed at how Cottey alumnae rally together to support their alma mater. We did it before when we helped fund the Academic Center. Now we have another opportunity to help the Alumnae Challenge reach the goal of $2 million. Thank you to all alumnae who have helped us raise well over half of the $2 million Alumnae Challenge goal. With almost $700,000 yet to raise and only a few months until the Defining Moment Campaign officially comes to an end, we need your help!

Why does Cottey need a new Fine Arts Instructional Building? To uphold Cottey’s excellent reputation for instruction in the fine arts. Cottey provides an outstanding education, and as alumnae, we want to make sure the next generation of students has every advantage a Cottey education can provide.

Can a building really do that? Yes it can! This new building will bring the fine arts together and unleash the creative minds of Cottey women. A dedicated, cohesive home for the College’s fine arts programs will change the way that Cottey women view themselves and their world. Yes, this is what a new building can do for the Cottey students.

The best part about joining in this effort is that you will help preserve the rich Cottey history that we, as alumnae, love so much. Neale Hall will NOT be torn down, but will be renovated. What an awesome opportunity for us as alumnae to build upon the hundred-plus years of history of this College.

So, will you join me in making a commitment to the Alumnae Challenge? Together we will raise the last $700,000 for the future of our beloved Cottey College. Let’s show the world that Cottey alumnae know that the arts, and women’s colleges, are vital to helping women achieve their dreams. CAN WE COUNT ON YOU?

Share the Cottey Fine Arts Experience!

FACT: Cottey College awards fine arts scholarships to incoming and current students who demonstrate a strong academic proficiency in art, art history, dance, music, or theatre/speech.

FACT: Fine arts students at Cottey do not have a centralized location to unify their talents and aspirations; rather, they are spread out amongst six buildings on campus, making interdisciplinary projects nearly impossible.

FACT: We know that Cottey students grow exponentially and enrich the lives of others when they are in an environment that encourages collaboration and innovation.

In order for Cottey to guarantee an exceptional fine arts experience for our talented students, we need your help in providing a collaborative environment for them to explore their interests, find new passions and expand their abilities. We have opened our fine arts scholarships to non-fine arts students, and we continue to encourage non-majors to dabble in the arts. Please help us build the Fine Arts Instructional Building, so that the students we recruit will not be limited by our facilities.

For more information on scholarships and deadlines, please contact the Office of Enrollment Management at 888-526-8839 or enrollmg@cottey.edu.

‘The fine arts scholarship has helped me stay at Cottey so I can participate in events such as the Music Department Recital and the Wind Ensemble concerts, which only further my love for performance and music.” —Kaysea Scott
I am biased. I love the fine arts: the theatre—both from the audience and from the stage—and the visual arts, especially Renaissance and Italian Baroque art. If you desire a lively and animated conversation on Caravaggio or Bernini, I am your man.

However, the fine arts add more than aesthetic value to life. Research shows advantages to participating in the arts outside of the pleasure factor. Data confirm that students who participate in the arts do better academically. “Sufficient data exists to overwhelmingly support the belief that study and participation in the fine arts is a key component in improving learning throughout all academic areas,” states Bob Bryant in his article, ‘The Importance of Fine Arts Education.’ ‘Evidence of its effectiveness in reducing student dropout, raising student attendance, developing better team players, fostering a love for learning, improving greater student dignity, enhancing student creativity, and producing a more prepared citizen for the workplace for tomorrow can be found documented in studies held in many varied settings, from school campuses, to corporate America.”

The College Board compared scores from students who had four years of study in art and music to those students who had only one-half year or less. Data from 1999 through 2011 illustrate that students with four years of arts study averaged 100 points better on the SAT regardless of socioeconomic status.²

Not only did these students do better on the SAT, they achieved more after matriculating to postsecondary education. Among low socioeconomic groups, 37 percent of students with high arts involvement earned a bachelor’s degree compared with 17 percent who had low arts involvement.³

Across socioeconomic lines, students who have high involvement in the arts are four times more likely to be recognized for academic achievement, four times more likely to participate in a math or science fair, three times more likely to win an award for school excellence, and three times more likely to be elected to class office.⁴

It’s likely that Virginia Alice Cottey didn’t have these particular outcomes in mind when she created the College’s first curriculum, but the arts were important to her and she made sure the arts were a part of the academic regimen on her campus. Courses in art, dance, music, and theatre are not adjunct to the college curriculum; they are courses that enhance the entire academic experience for students.

In the pages that follow, you’ll read about some of the outstanding programs and artists at Cottey College, from talented alumnae to gifted educators, from the music conservatory established by the founder to today’s popular dance courses.

As academically enriching as the arts have proven to be, one can’t overlook the beauty they add to individual lives or a campus environment. Music and dance concerts, plays, and art exhibitions offer those transcendent moments when art surpasses the ordinary and allows the audience member, and the artist herself, a glimpse of something almost mystical.

“You’ve all seen something at some point in your life, a performance like this,” said Elizabeth Gilbert, author of Eat, Pray, Love in her TED Talk, “Your Elusive Creative Genius.” “The dancer would step through some kind of portal, and he wasn’t doing anything different than he had ever done for a thousand nights before, but everything would align, and all of a sudden he would no longer appear to be merely human. You know, he would be like lit from within and lit from below and all lit up on fire with divinity.”⁵

Any of us who have ever spontaneously risen to applaud a magnificent performance recognize that feeling. So yes, the arts are an incredible asset to the academic curriculum, but let’s also acknowledge the power they have to move us spiritually and emotionally as well. Here’s to the arts!

The Creativity Connection

‘We know creativity is an important part of leadership.’

By Dr. Cathryn Pridal
Vice President for Academic Affairs

The fine arts have been part of Cottey College since its founding. When the school opened, Olive Harrison taught music and Mary Cottey taught art to the 12 young women who enrolled for the first semester. We highly value the learning our students receive, as well as the campus enrichment provided by those students through performances and recitals. A student stated, “Art opened my eyes to learning. I realized learning is like a falling stack of dominos – once started it won’t stop!” A student taking her first dance class said “I have learned to trust myself, my ideas, my body, and other people.”

At Cottey, we educate women to be leaders, learners, and citizens, and we know creativity is an important part of leadership. Research exploring the lasting effects of education in the fine arts demonstrates a relationship between fine arts education and creativity. For example, one study found participation in a music program improved students’ scores on verbal fluency, figural fluency, flexibility, verbal-originality, and figural-originality, all skills that comprise creative ability. In another study, students with more fine arts education showed a higher understanding of multiple or alternative vantage points, allowing for more creative problem solving. Concordantly, a student mentioned that, through taking a dance class, “I have learned to be a leader even if I don’t want to AND to be able to follow because you can’t always lead.” Other critical components of leadership include confidence and self-reflection and research shows that students who participate in fine arts classes show greater gains in these areas as well, when compared with students who did not take those types of classes. These research results may not be especially surprising, however, on a national level creativity scores have been gradually declining since 1990, at a time when the need for innovative thinking is on the rise.

Business leaders report that innovation is essential to developing and maintaining a competitive global advantage and, as a result, are placing greater importance on hiring creative workers. In 2010, IBM conducted a survey of 1,500 chief executive officers from 60 countries and 33 industries worldwide. These global leaders suggested creativity helps employers capitalize on complexity, and that creativity is the most important leadership quality. In a global economy, the world is the hiring pool and the premier positions will be awarded to the applicants with innovative and entrepreneurial skills. At Cottey, we are obliged to provide the educational options our students need to be more competitive for these employment opportunities. A business major writes, “The fine arts at Cottey College has impacted my life in so many ways. Without a shadow of a doubt it has taught me to never give up no matter what and be confident in who you are, because you never know what opportunities will arise. As a business major, having the ability to incorporate both music and dance into my educational experience, reflects who I am as a woman while creating more possibilities…” Likewise, from another student, “I love that Cottey encourages its students to explore the creative world as well as the factual world, even for an English major, like myself.”

In addition to helping individual students to achieve gains in creativity, leadership, and problem-solving and to enriching the campus-life experience for the Cottey community, a strong fine arts curriculum is also an effective recruiting tool. At the high school level, students who participated in arts programs were much more likely to: be high academic achievers, be elected to class office, participate in a math or science fair, or win an award for writing an essay or poem. Additionally, students who took courses in music performance and music appreciation scored higher on the SAT than students with no arts preparation. A new student who toured campus and learned about the fine arts opportunities reported later, “Really, I could say that the arts program is what convinced me to come to Cottey,” when asked about what influenced her to enroll at Cottey.

We are hopeful construction on our new building will begin soon, so more Cottey students can benefit from educational opportunities offered there and can learn life lessons, as described by a dance class student, “I have learned if you don’t give someone your full weight, it is harder to have a stable relationship.” What a profound realization for her to carry into the rest of her life!
The story of how Brianne Fulton got to Cottey is the classic tale of so many young women who don’t picture themselves at a small women’s college in Nevada, Missouri. Now, after experiences around the world, she can’t imagine herself anywhere else.

As a high school student in Nevada, Brianne was tired of small-town life and wanted to attend a large university in an urban setting. When she finally had an opportunity to visit one and stepped into a lecture hall that fit twice the number of students as her graduating class, she knew it wasn’t for her.

The summer of her senior year, she worked as the lifeguard in Hinkhouse pool during Cottey-P.E.O. Seminar and met Dina Rubey Gunderson ‘92. Dina was an accomplished graphic design and marketing specialist from Atlanta, Georgia.

“As a first generation college student, I didn’t see a career in art as a very practical way to make a living,” Brianne says, “and I felt I owed it to my parents to be successful. Dina helped me begin to believe that I could find a career that fulfilled my creative side, as well as paid the bills.”

On a campus tour later that year, she met Patty McLoone, assistant professor of art, who was busy installing an exhibit. Professor McLoone stopped working to advise Brianne about the quality of art instruction at Cottey, and how she could incorporate the fine arts into her future plans.

“That level of commitment really impressed me. Then, when I attended Cottey, the personal encouragement that I received, and the high expectations that my professors held for me, served as a springboard to my success in a four-year institution.” Brianne graduated with an Associate in Arts degree from Cottey in 1999 and transferred to Truman State University in Kirksville, Missouri. There she pursued a Bachelor of Fine Arts with an emphasis in photography, and travelled abroad for the first time—to Egypt!

This fueled Brianne’s desire to see more of the world, and she set a new goal: traveling to the birthplace of her favorite band, The Beatles. After graduating with a BFA in 2002, she returned to Nevada and worked at Heartland Hospital, living at home in order to save money. In the fall, she joined a work abroad organization that placed her as a customer service representative for British Gas in Leeds, England. She lived there for six months, sharing a house with a native Englisher who remains one of her best friends. Some weekends they would visit different areas of the country, and she spent a week holiday in Germany.

Besides travelling throughout England, then the United States as a Cottey admission representative from 2004-2007, Brianne visited Jingdezhen, China, during graduate school. There she served as a panelist for the National Council on Education for the Ceramic Arts (NCECA) international symposium—the first of its kind between America and China. She credits her excellent Cottey education, in part, for enabling her to be one of seven students selected nationally for this honor. Another influential factor was her advisor at Fort Hays (Kansas) State University, Linda Ganstrom.

‘My experiences at Cottey have led me to focus on feminist themes in my art,’ Brianne says. ‘When I looked for graduate schools, I wanted strong female mentors who would understand and nurture that.’ Brianne’s master’s thesis exhibit in ceramics titled, ‘Lovely Hungers,’ depicts beauty, age, authority, and sexuality from the female perspective (see inset photos).

Upon obtaining her MFA, Brianne taught art at Crowder College in Neosho, Missouri. She took a tenure-track position as assistant professor of art at Cottey last year, and, as the only full-time faculty member who is also an alumna, has come home in more ways than one. She teaches in the basement of Neale Hall where she once studied, and purchased a home half a block from her parents.

Brianne is especially pleased to be co-coordinating an artist-in-residence program this fall featuring Professor Ganstrom. She will have a multi-day workshop for students, a gallery show, and a performance piece. The exhibit will feature Ganstrom’s new sculpture inspired by Alice in Wonderland, and a ceramic white rabbit of Brianne’s. This event complements ‘WONDER...an Evening of Music and Dance Inspired by Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland,’ a concert by the Cottey Chamber Singers and the Cottey-in-Motion Dance Company on November 22-23.

Brianne’s story is a classic example of the close connections that are intrinsic in Cottey’s culture, and the success you achieve because of your experience here. Alumnae, in particular, need to share their own stories more often with young women who can also choose a future that includes Cottey.

In case you can’t tell from our same last name, Brianne and I are sisters-in-law. We are also on the same Cottey reunion cycle, which can be another close bond between generations, as alumnae well know. In addition to being an exemplary teacher, Brianne is a wonderful aunt and role model to my four children, especially my two daughters, who I hope will grow up to be just like her, in more ways than one.

When Virginia Alice Cottey founded her College in 1884, she had strong ideas about the education of women. She believed that moral and physical training could be combined with mental training to provide an excellent education. Courses described in the first Catalog included physical culture, elocution, mathematics and natural science, history and literature, and music. While the focus on the liberal and cultural arts remained firm in the early years, as her school grew, Virginia Alice Cottey made many adjustments in curriculum, programs, and degrees.

The music department was a success from the beginning, and by the turn of the century, the cover of the Catalog carried the title “Cottey College and Conservatory of Music,” a change from “Cottey College Home and Day School for Young Ladies.” The first Catalog states: “the best facilities are offered for the study of this beautiful art. We have secured the services of Miss Minnie Rodgers, an able and experienced teacher. Her record of success in similar institutions in the East warrants the opinion that she is not only thoroughly cultured, but a successful teacher...We have good pianos for practice, and shall spare no pains to make this department a success.”

It was important to the founder to have a strong faculty, trained at excellent schools. She believed in foreign study and sought faculty who had studied abroad, especially in music. Dr. and Madame Edouard Blitz were notable faculty who arrived in 1895. Dr. Blitz was an accomplished violinist and a native of France, who had been a student at the Conservatoire National in Paris. His wife was an excellent pianist who had studied with Adolph Samuel and Mendelssohn. They had spent the two years before arriving at Cottey studying in Paris, with Mme. Blitz concentrating on teaching methods.

The Blitzes presided over a period of incredible growth in the music department, and life at the College was enriched by their presence. Their monthly recitals and lessons for local students brought support for Cottey during the construction of Rosemary Hall in 1903. This era in the Cottey Conservatory of Music ended in 1904 when the Blitzes decided to leave Cottey. Their story had a tragic ending when Mme. Blitz committed suicide just before Commencement that year. Mr. Blitz went to New York to continue his career as a violinist.

Another notable music faculty member was Duchess Daphne Goodenough. In 1914, she became the Director of the Piano Department, and composed the alma mater that is still sung today.

A century later, the Cottey music department, originally the Cottey Conservatory of Music, remains a vital force in the life of students, and has maintained its status as an accredited institutional member of the National Association of Schools of Music since 1956.
A fter 32 years of dedicated service to Cottey College, Dyke Kiel retired last May. With big shoes to fill, Assistant Professor of Music Amanda Cook is up for the challenge and is looking forward to helping young women develop to their fullest potential.

“What really drew me to the position at Cottey was the people,” said Cook. “I did a Skype interview and the two students who were part of the interviewing process were so well spoken and had such great potential, I just knew I wanted to be a part of helping other young women find their own confidence.”

Cook holds Bachelor of Music degrees in clarinet performance and music education from the University of Missouri-Kansas City, and a Master of Music degree in clarinet performance from the University of Michigan.
While teaching woodwind and music theory courses at Cottey College, she is completing her dissertation, Solos in Context: Clarinet Duets for the Studio Teacher, for her Doctor of Music degree in clarinet performance at the prestigious Indiana University Jacobs School of Music.

While Cook does not come from a musical family, she has had a love for music and singing since her childhood. It was not until a seventh grade band teacher encouraged her talent on the clarinet that Cook found her calling. What Cook enjoyed most about studying music was the challenge presented by the breadth of material to conquer.

“You cannot know your full potential until you work to realize it,” said Cook.

While Cook’s parents always encouraged her to pursue a music career, she did field questions from quite a few relatives about the career potential of such a decision.

“Just as a talent for sports can help pay for your college education, musical talent can also earn you scholarships,” said Cook.

She went on to point out that music can be a creative outlet, a source of relaxation and balance, and an opportunity to develop self-confidence and a strong work ethic. “I believe there are correlations to the skills and qualities needed for success across many different fields. For example, my sister is a corporate tax attorney, and when she first applied for summer internships in her last year of law school, each interviewer asked about the orchestra class on her undergraduate transcript. Many employers value the hours spent in a practice room and are looking for self-motivated, creative employees.”

When music majors are selecting a school, Cook believes it is important for the students to choose a studio teacher who is also a great musician themselves, and offers a teaching style that is comparable to the student’s learning style. Cook’s personal teaching approach is to create a respectful and creative environment with clear expectations.

“I think it is important to teach strategies, breaking a process into steps and giving students the tools to develop a new skill or reach a new goal. For example, a common definition of practicing is time spent making sound on your instrument, but this does not necessarily lead to improvement. I teach strategies for practicing to make the best use of your time and keep you healthy and focused. I can be particular but enthusiastic, and have been accused of dancing during repertoire class on a few occasions,” laughed Cook.

As she begins her first year with Cottey, Cook looks forward to meeting new students and helping them to realize their full potential. Cook hopes that P.E.O.s will send their musical students to Cottey to explore all the wonderful tools and opportunities that a Cottey education offers to both music and non-music majors.

“You cannot know your full potential until you work to realize it.”

The Dance Department at Cottey allows students to explore dance in a liberal arts setting, where topics covered in biology or history classes overlap with topics in dance classes. Faculty want students to maintain a panoramic world view, one in which the field of dance is enhanced and, in turn, enhances their other coursework and life activities.

At many other colleges, upper-level technique classes and specialized classes such as Improvisation are reserved for dance majors and minors only. Cottey admits any student to any dance course, providing she has met the prerequisites.

As with all disciplines, the small class size gives each student the advantage of individualized attention. Because so much assessment in a dance class is based on observation and immediate feedback, fewer students per class allow the instructors to focus on each individual student more often. Hence, students get more feedback and opportunities to apply that feedback and improve. Dance technique classes are usually capped at 16 students.

The mission of the Dance Department is to enhance physical, intellectual, emotional, and social aspects of students’ development.

The view is of dance within the world, not dance as the world. This view benefits students who only take one dance class, as well as students who complete the Associate of Fine Arts (AFA) degree in dance, offered since 2012.

A graduate of the Cottey College AFA in dance program:
- Demonstrates above-average dance technique and performance quality in a variety of dance styles.
- Creates dance works with focused concepts and aesthetic quality.
- Integrates ideas across areas of study and experience into her development as an artist.
- Evaluates her own preparation for transfer to a baccalaureate or professional program, or future experiences as a performing artist, choreographer, wellness professional, or educator, and implements plans for future study.

For the student pursuing a career in dance, degree programs focus on the development of performers, choreographers, and educators, and encourage the emergence of new, diverse, and creative dance techniques and styles. Although a college degree in dance is not necessary to perform, it is necessary for those who want to teach dance in college, high school, or elementary schools.

A dance degree also provides a foundation for those who want to develop a business or career in the arts, but not necessarily perform. Many dance majors explore careers in fitness and the health sciences. Others gain a love of dance that does not lead to a career path, but is something that will always be a part of their life.

Students from the Cottey Dance Department have gone on to prestigious dance programs at transfer institutions, such as Cornish School of the Arts in Seattle, Colombia College in Chicago, and the University of Maryland. Cottey dance alumnae are teaching and performing in many cities across the United States, and frequently serve as guest artists and choreographers for Cottey’s dance program.

If you know of a prospective student who is interested in dance, or if you would like to send information about Cottey’s dance program to schools or studios near you, please email Professor Jo Byrnes at jbyrnes@cottey.edu.

Cottey’s Dance Department is comprised of Jo Byrnes, associate professor of dance, and Christi Fulton ’96, adjunct assistant professor of dance.
Alumnae Spotlight / Caitlyn Nichols ’10

California native Caitlyn Nichols ’10 has returned after three years at the Royal Welsh College of Music and Drama (RWCMD) in Cardiff, Wales. She graduated this summer with a degree in stage management and technical theatre. It’s not your typical theatre degree, but then, Caitlyn isn’t your typical theatre major.

From a young age, Caitlyn was exposed to the theatre. Her father did lighting and sound for a local theatre while Caitlyn’s mother was an actor.

“I grew up going to dance and acting classes and my mom wanted me to be on stage,” said Caitlyn. “Then middle school hit and I discovered technical theatre where I could get paid to do this. This was much to the displeasure of my mom.”

When it came time to choose a college, Caitlyn was very interested in art schools, but the high cost was a disincentive. An acquaintance of Caitlyn’s mother was a Cottey alumna and opera singer. Karmel Miller ’85 told Caitlyn that Cottey would be the perfect choice for her. She visited campus during a ‘C’ for Yourself! Weekend, and when she was offered a full-ride scholarship, she accepted.

At Cottey, Caitlyn quickly got involved in the technical side of theatre, and stage managed several productions, including the American premier of the African opera Afiwa. Her Cottey experiences cemented her career choice.

“One of the keys was the fact that we had a full on theatre building open to us 24/7,” she explained. “We could go to Dr. Andrews and Professor Denison and say, ‘Hey, we’re interested in this project.’ They always treated technicians with respect, and they were the ones who said, ‘You could make a lot of money doing this.’”

RWCMD typically accepts only 15-20 students per year in its technical theatre program. Caitlyn was one of three Americans admitted her first year, but the only one admitted solely on the strength of her portfolio—a portfolio built with her Cottey experiences.

“It was the fact that I had actual full shows under my belt as a stage manager,” said Caitlyn. “That I could do that at Cottey and with the opera; I had a world premiere on my résumé. Cottey allowed me to be all of those things.”

While working for the Royal National Theatre of London, she had the “interim” removed from her title as assistant production manager because of her experience and proficiency. One of the shows she was working, Hansel and Gretel, was nominated for an Olivier award.

“Because my interim title was dropped, I was allowed to be entered as an assistant production manager in the nomination,” she said. “It still feels a bit like a dream.”

Degree in hand, Caitlyn is looking for work. Her dream job would either be traveling stage manager for a big musical, or an Imagineer at Disney. Both are great choices, and Caitlyn wishes more young women knew about technical theatre as a career.

“It’s important that girls know this is a viable option. Cottey is a safe place where there is no fear that someone will tell you, ‘You can’t do that.’ And that’s one of the most amazing things about their arts program.”

Study Abroad? Cottey Can Help

Have you been envious the last few years as you’ve read about the Cottey trips to Europe, New Zealand, Guatemala, and Japan and wished you could have the same experience? Or, like Caitlyn Nichols, have you wanted to study abroad? Have you been accepted to a university in another country and are now wondering how to pay for it? If so, you are encouraged to apply for the Lucille H. Smith Scholarship for Foreign Study.

As an alumna, you may be eligible for this scholarship, established by the Illinois State Chapter of the P.E.O. Sisterhood in honor of Lucille H. Smith, past president of International Chapter of the P.E.O. Sisterhood. The scholarship is available to a Cottey alumna who will study abroad. Applications may be obtained from Cottey’s Office of Financial Aid after February 1, 2014.

Under One Roof!

By Barbara Andes, Campaign Chairman

Fine arts classes currently meet in spaces scattered across campus, many squeezed in among administrative offices and basketball courts. Neale Hall, second oldest building on campus, houses the creative arts. The building was never intended to be used as an art center – it was a temporary solution, but 40 years later it’s still used for painting, sculpture, ceramics and photography.

It is time to bring all the fine arts together UNDER ONE ROOF with a renovated Neale Hall and 32,000 square feet of new dedicated space where our students may soar, create, discover, and develop critical skills for lifelong work and learning.

Join us in completing the funding of the Fine Arts Instructional Building with a gift large or small.

Just note the FAIB on the memo line of your check and your gift will be designated for the building. You may send your contribution to Institutional Advancement, 1000 W. Austin, Nevada, MO, 64772, or contact Carla Farmer, campaign manager, at 417-448-1418. Naming opportunities are still available.

Giving is a Family Affair

A love of music and P.E.O. led Sally Parker and her family to name the voice rehearsal room in the new Fine Arts Instructional Building after her mother, Polly Black Edwards.

“I have a daughter who is an opera singer,” said Sally, “and we all love music. Mother passed away last August, and we thought it would be nice to gift this space after her.”

The gift truly is a family affair, as 11 members of Sally’s family were involved in the contribution. There is, of course, Sally Parker, all five of her daughters, her brother Duke Edwards, her sister Jane Morris (whom Sally proudly mentions was the first female airline captain for American Airlines), and Jane’s three daughters.

“It was a wonderful way to come together and donate for our mother so we could honor her,” said Sally.

Polly Edwards was a member of Chapter EL, Oklahoma, and it was into that chapter that Sally was initiated. That began a long line of P.E.O. involvement in her family which continues to this day.

“I have five daughters, and all of them are P.E.O.s” Sally said proudly. “I am so proud of P.E.O.s and their wonderful values, and passing them along to the next generation of women.”

Growing up in a P.E.O. family—and in Oklahoma, with its proximity to Nevada, Missouri—Sally, of course, was familiar with Cottey College. However, neither she nor her any of her daughters attended Cottey, although her niece, Polly Morris Kranz ’07, is an alumna.

Why was Sally interested in donating to a college that neither she nor her daughters had attended?

“I really believe in the Cottey philosophy and in promoting women’s education,” she explained. “I am also very interested in how Cottey is expanding to become a front-runner in women’s education instead of settling for second place. I just want that to continue; I am an advocate for women.”

Members of Chapter GA, California, gathered in front of the famous Hollywood sign with a giant check to proudly announce their $40,000 gift to the Defining Moment Campaign. Chapter GA believes that investing in Cottey College will advance the educational goals of women. Their gift established an endowed scholarship for a student in the third or fourth year, pursuing an International Relations/Business degree. Chapter GA realizes that Cottey students in their third and fourth years might not have the needed scholarship support as Cottey transitions to four-year programs. Joann Koll, Chapter GA president, states, “We believe it is important to give where the greatest need exists.”

In Memoriam

We extend our condolences to the family and friends of Dr. F. Kirk Metzger, professor emeritus of history at Cottey College from 1977–1997. On August 16, 2013, Kirk passed away at the age of 77 in Qawra, Malta, where he lived with his wife Donna Lynde.

Son of Karl and Eleanor Metzger, Kirk was raised in New Brunswick, New Jersey, attended Bowdoin College in Maine and Rutgers University before earning his Ph.D. in French history at Marquette University. In 1968 he moved with his family to London, Ontario, where he served for many years on the faculty of history at The University of Western Ontario, before joining the faculty at Cottey College in Nevada, Missouri.

He and Donna retired to England and enjoyed traveling together before settling more recently in Malta. A lover of reading, a good debate, and WW II movie classics, he had a quick mind and a sharp wit. He was a proud father of his four children, Tory, Patrick (Christina), Amy (Duncan), and Christopher (Sunny). He was preceded by his parents and his brother Karl, and is survived by his wife, Donna, four children, six grandchildren, and a niece and nephew.

traveling 300 miles from Manhattan to the nation’s capitol in Washington, D.C.
The ride took place from Sept. 21 to 25.
The ride was designed to raise awareness around sustainability, renewable energy, climate issues, and bicycle advocacy. Kayla has been a runner for years, but bicycling is new for her.
Although 300 miles was undoubtedly a challenge, bicycling and cyclists sort

Hinrichs. “After living in Bangladesh human health are so important to me that riding 300 miles seems like a small

At the time of her death she was head of special collections and acting curator of the university’s museums.

"We are celebrating, and continuing to work hard," said Dr. Judy Rogers, president of Cottey College. "We are celebrating because we have topped the five-year, $35 million goal of our campaign: A Defining Moment: The Campaign for Cottey College, four months before the end of the campaign. The College has raised $36,207,273.90, through the combined efforts of volunteers, led by Barbara Andes, campaign chairman, and Cottey staff, led by Carla Farmer, campaign manager."

"Contributions are continuing to come in and we are on the verge of breaking ground on the new Fine Arts Instructional Building. This is why we continue to work diligently," added Dr. Rogers. "We met the overall goal of the campaign, but we haven't crossed the finish line with all of the campaign priorities."

"P.E.O.s, alumnae, and friends of the College have risen to the challenge for our largest fundraising effort ever," said Dr. Rogers, addressing delegates at the convention. "Through their contributions to A Defining Moment, they have changed the lives of women, both now and for years to come. We thank them for their vision, commitment, and generosity."

"Our donors recognize the commitment and vision of Cottey College as well," continued Dr. Rogers. "We have worked diligently to position the College as a model for women’s education. From our leadership programs, to the addition of select four-year degree programs that each contain the threads of women’s leadership, social responsibility, and global awareness, we are prepared to send the next generation of women leaders out into the world."

"We celebrate the achievement of this extraordinary accomplishment, and we also are rolling up our sleeves to bring this campaign to an incredibly successful end when it concludes on January 31, 2014," continued Dr. Rogers. "We have no intention of resting on our laurels. A fine arts instructional building will promote collaboration, creativity, and enrich the quality of a Cottey education. As Cottey works with alumnae, P.E.O. chapters and friends to increase our enrollment we hear over and over just how important the new Fine Arts Instructional Building is to accomplish this. Our students, and future students, need and deserve a new space, one that brings the fine and performing arts together by constructing a first-rate fine arts building."

"Everyone, from alumnae to friends of the College, is excited to be a part of this successful endeavor," said Barbara Andes, campaign chairman. "Like me, our donors believe in supporting education for women, and they believe in Cottey College. Their generosity has demonstrated this commitment over the last four years. I am confident we will raise the remaining funds needed for the Fine Arts Instructional Building, just as we did for the overall goal."

"Philanthropic giving at Cottey has never been higher," said Judyth Wier, vice president for institutional advancement. "The success of A Defining Moment demonstrates significant momentum at Cottey. The fact that we topped the $35 million goal before the end of the campaign shows the trust that Cottey alumnae, P.E.O.s, and friends place in this institution. We understand the immediate need for the critically important fine arts building, and our efforts to complete this project will continue. The campaign does not end until January 31, 2014. There is still time to support this defining moment for Cottey College."
